Roxbury, May 19, 1866. Dear Harry: Hong Villand Your letter is just received. Although, in apprising us of our dear Tranny's illness, you write in a strain to allay our fears, we shall nevertheless continue to feel arrains about her until assured of her convalescence; all the more so, because, till now, she has known noth ing of the ills that flesh is heir to. The must not be too much in a hurry to get over her attack, lest a relapse take place, making the last state worse than the first. We thank you for not keeping us ignorant of her situation, and shall vely on you for a telegram at any time should she grow worse. Fine her a kiss for me, another for her mother, and as many more for the boys as you choose, with our united invocations for her speedy recovery. Should medical treatment be needed, doubtless she will prefer (as we all should) the homoeopathic; provided a competent physician of that school can be readily procured.

I am still suffering from the effects of my two falls, and have been as useless for the last eight weeks as a fift wheel to a wach." I have had four different physicians, and four different kinds of treatment; but nothing I have triel gives me any relief whatever. I suppose I am suffering from inflammatory rhoumatism, as well as from my sprains. My right arm is so affected as to make even the writing of a brief note like this a very painful effort. It is a serious drawback upon my usefulness. Of course, I have not been able to do any thing about my projected Anti-Slavery History; not even to write an occasional article for the Independent or Nation. He got your telegram to-day, stating. (as we supposed you would) that you decline the overture made by this. Harrington for the rent of her cottage for three months, and have communicated the same to her. Your housekeeping has been so una widebly as well as wespectedly expension, - making the sum enormous for you and harry, - that I hope you will deem it wise to terminate it as soon as practicable, and let danny return to us, coming with her yourself if possible, as we will do every thing in our power to accommodate you both with you can make arrangements more satisfactory to you. The beautiful spron or lade you have forwarded, to be presented to our young friend Ritchie will, amuedly, be highly prized by him. Tell Farry we have had all our paths nicely gravelled and graded. They they around us is looking very beautiful. William has concluded to enter ento partners hip with his old friend Mr. fenkins, under the firm of feating of Garrison - Mr. Jen-Kins being put first on account of his age, and the amount of capital he puts into the concern. they have rented a large and spacing store, eligibly situated, but a stone's throw from Willian o present place of business. Rout $3,000. He woul business, however, has been quite dall for a fortnight past, and William is anxiously waiting for consignments.

I am glad, as you are, that the President has vetoed the Colorado bile, though giving him no credit for doing so; for, could he have been some that he could have had two additional Lenators to stand by his policy, by the admirain of Colorado, beyond a feradventure he would have approved the bill. The Republicons have unwisely tried to any. ment their strength by an unwarrant able There seems to be no indication how long it is the intention of Congress to continue in session; but I trust there will be a determination, on its part, to allow as brief an interior between this and the next serior as practicable, so as to hold the President in check to the utermost. We have had letters from Wendell and Lucy: They are very busy in getting ready for their new home at Ovango. I trust that you are better of you- neutalgie attacks. He shall look for you next letter with special interest. yours, most affectionately, your Lloyd Garrison.